The markets were still characterized by irregularity and prices of most kinds of merchandise and produce were constantly fluctuating. At the Produce Exchange flour was dull and in buyers' favor. The demand was confined to shippers, but a fair export do-mand prevailed, at lower prices. Corn was higher, but quiet. Oats were without decided change. Whiskey was decidedly higher. Pork and lard were dull and lower and nominal. Preights were quiet but steady. Groceries were firm, but the market, generally speaking, quiet. Cotton was duil and easier, both for spot and tuture. Petroleum was duil and unchanged. Naval stores were quiet. Spirits were decidedly higher.
